

Harrison Senior Living Appoints Jenny Antonio as New Chief Nursing Officer

Harrison Senior Living, a family-owned and operated network of independent living, assisted living, and skilled nursing facilities, is proud to announce Jenny Antonio as its new Chief Nursing Officer.

As Chief Nursing Officer, Ms. Antonio is responsible for providing clinical leadership and ensuring outstanding care delivery throughout Harrison Senior Living's five facilities. Along with her leadership role in the nursing department, she oversees the activities departments, where daily social, mental, and sensory events and activities are intentionally planned to improve the physical and mental health of the residents.

Ms. Antonio is also involved in making sure the facilities are compliant with their federal and respective state regulations. This includes working to standardize policies and practices across the senior care facilities as well as to improve the use of electronic health records.

"As the new Chief Nursing Officer, Ms. Antonio brings with her a wealth of both senior care and leadership experience that will be a great asset to our communities," said Harrison Saunders, CEO of Harrison Senior Living. "Her extensive clinical background coupled with her policy development experience will help our staff continually deliver and improve the quality of care our residents have come to expect from us."

Ms. Antonio comes to Harrison Senior Living with over 30 years of experience working within the healthcare industry, particularly within senior care. Some of her previous efforts included building and instructing the Nursing Home Administrators 120-hour training course in Pennsylvania as well as conducting numerous CEU classes for nurses. Over the course of her career, Ms. Antonio has also developed a background in policy development and system implementation, something that has helped her improve care and regulatory compliance for various facilities during her years of service.
